Prohibition and Disbandment of the Democratic Party.

The role of the Democratic Party in the well-known events of recent decades, and especially in the last five years, gives every reason to consider it a criminal organization, as the activities of its members fall under the definition of organized crime. However, the illegality of its activities is only part of the truth. The other part is the mental abnormality of its members. The Democratic Party is a gathering of psychopaths, since its ideological foundation is mental pathology.

Every illness has its own history. A typical history of mental illness is the encouragement of a particular pathology, which, unopposed, develops into a stable pathological condition. Constantly indulging children's desires and satisfying all their whims and desires is deeply wrong and based on ignorance and confusion of the roles of educators and those being educated. Without learning obedience from their educators, achieved through punishment when necessary, pupils do not acquire the necessary wisdom of life that everything must be earned. Continuous encouragement of behavior regardless of its appropriateness deforms the psyche of spoiled children, depriving them of the opportunity to acquire the ability to regulate themselves psychologically, and without this ability, they are no longer able to restrain themselves in appropriate situations and, encountering no obstacles, move relentlessly toward vice, like a car without brakes moving down a slope.

Learning from mistakes means, first and foremost, recognizing them as such. Experiencing pain and overcoming fear are particularly important in this process of acquiring life experience. In cases where such experience is absent or lacking, or as a result of distortion of its meaning, adequate mental models of inappropriate behavior cannot be formed, and without them, the ability to self-regulate psychologically cannot develop, which turns people into psychopaths.

The Democratic Party is the result of a long distortion of scientifically proven principles of child rearing. A disease that has affected millions and become a pandemic cannot be cured by persuasion and soft measures. As in other similar cases, decisive and tough measures are needed. In the case of wars, killing murderers and punishing villains is legitimate and justified. In the case mentioned here, priority should be given to measures aiming to eliminate the causes of people's pathologization. Insane and legally incompetent people should not be allowed to exercise power, either as voters or as elected officials. In this sense, prohibiting and disbanding the Democratic Party and depriving its members of their voting rights is appropriate. It is also necessary to punish criminals who have committed crimes while insane. There should be no obstacles or restrictions to punishment, and members of the Senate should not be excluded from punishment. Recovery will be a painful process, but pain is necessary to bring the sick to a sane state, since avoidance of pain was the cause of their illness*. The sick must feel pain in order to come to their senses. Those who are incapable of correcting themselves must be punished and deprived of their rights.

* Im Gegensatz zu Alkoholiker und Drogenabhängigen haben manche „erfolgreiche“ Psychopathen ihre Schmerzen „erfolgreich“ bekämpft und isoliert, was aus Angst vor Selbstverletzungen geschieht und zur Gewohnheit wird. In weiterem Verlauf wird das Selbstbild gesäubert, perfektioniert, und letztendlich zum (gottähnlichen) Selbst-Idol gemacht, an dem nicht gezweifelt werden darf. Dieses Konstrukt anzuzweifeln wäre gleichbedeutend mit dem Kontrollverlust und der Ohnmacht, was auf jeden Fall vermieden wird. Um innere Konflikte und damit verbundene Schmerzen zu vermeiden, werden sie nach außen getragen (verschoben) und dort ausagiert, d.h. es wird versucht, die Realität zu korrigieren (notfalls mit Gewalt), statt an seinem korrekturbedürftigen Verhalten und Selbst(bild) etwas zu ändern. Die Vermeidung von Angst und Schmerz ist treibende Kraft solcher Versuche.

I demand the seizure of all assets and property of the German Nazi criminals and their criminal organizations due to abuse of power for arbitrary political terror, unlawful oppression of opponents, forcible retention of power and establishing a criminal political regime, including Nazism and fascism, brainwashing, child abuse, and others mentioned in my reports.

Peer review is the central part of the fraudulent schemes through which the misappropriation and legalization of money laundering in academic pseudoscience takes place. The peer review process is controlled by criminal and pseudoscientific organizations - Springer Nature, Wiley-Blackwell, Taylor & Francis and several others, and the beneficiaries of their activities are numerous pseudoscientists who are busy producing pseudoscientific publications and looting government budgets. Most organizations listed in the Yearbook of International Organizations are criminal organizations, among them the World Health Organization, the International Science Council, the International Psychoanalytical Association, the World Psychiatric Association. While the World Health Organization's funding was cut off by Donald Trump's executive order of January 20, 2025, the other organizations mentioned here continue their fraudulent activities, although I have been demanding their closure and the criminal prosecution of their members since 2014. In this regard, I would like to remind you of my letters to the Attorney General of North Carolina, the current Director of the National Institutes of Health, the Secretary of the Department of Justice, and to Donald Trump.

Начиная с 2017 года я сообщаю Вам о преступлениях, творящихся в Германии, и требую принятия действенных мер для их прекращения. Поскольку с Вашей стороны до сих пор не последовало никаких действий, совершить которые Вы обязаны, чтобы не быть соучастником тяжких преступлений, я напоминаю Вам о небесконечности моего терпения. Конечно не только Вы виновны в страданиях, пережитых мною за это время, но Ваша вина в поощрении зла посредством бездействия и безразличия достаточно велика, чтобы переполнить допустимую меру прегрешений перед Господом Богом. Если Вы не желаете бомбить и убивать немецких нацистских преступников, для чего имеется достаточно оснований, то наказать их возможно другими способами, о которых Вам и Вашим сотрудникам хорошо известно. Наказать же преступников необходимо ввиду сказанного о природе зла и об ответственности каждого человека в его предотвращении.

English translation. Reminder letter addressed to Donald Trump.

Since 2017, I have been writing to you to inform you of the crimes taking place in Germany and to demand that you take effective measures to stop them. Since you have not yet taken the actions you are obliged to take to avoid being an accomplice to serious crimes, I remind you of the finality of my patience. Certainly you are not alone guilty of the suffering I have endured during this time, but your guilt in encouraging evil through inaction and indifference is great enough to exceed the allowable measure of transgression before the Lord God. If you do not wish to bomb and to kill the German Nazi criminals, for which there are sufficient grounds, then it is possible to punish them in other ways, of which you and your staff are well aware. However, it is necessary to punish the criminals in view of what has been said about the nature of evil and the responsibility of every man and woman to counteract it.

Letter addressed to the President of the United States on the occasion of the visit of Friedrich Merz to the White House. (English translation from original Russian text).

Friedrich Merz, who intends to visit the American President and impersonate the Chancellor of Germany, is in reality a fraudulent and mentally ill person whose rights are limited due to his insanity and legal incapacity. On the basis of the order dated 14.10.2019, I am his guardian, as a consequence of which he is not authorized to perform any legal acts without my authorization, and if he attempts to perform them unilaterally, they are unlawful and null and void. {1}

The state that Friedrich Merz supposedly represents as chancellor is a figment of his sick fantasy, it does not exist in reality, which is confirmed by numerous facts of political arbitrariness and economic disorganization in Germany. The illness of Friedrich Merz and most of the people living in Germany is described in the monograph by Eugene Bleuler, published in 1911, which I mention in my books on the same subject {2-4}. In view of Friedrich Mertz's gravely ill condition, he is unable to recognize its manifestation in characteristic symptoms, among them delirium, hallucinations, and illogical thinking. Friedrich Merz is dreaming and in reality does not represent Germany, but rather the criminal organizations that I have prohibited. Since my scientific and professional activities in Germany continue to be severely impeded, as I have reported, including to the current Director of the National Institutes of Health and the US Secretary of Health and Human Services {5}, no therapeutic measures can be taken with regard to Friedrich Merz, also because of the absence of a scientific psychological school and an institute for psychological diagnosis in Germany. However, it is my duty to inform the American President of the above facts and to warn him against making possible mistakes in the treatment of insane and legally incapable persons, among whom Friedrich Merz is one.

On the Duties of the President of the United States in the Denazification of Germany.

When asked about the purpose of American soldiers on German ground, there is only one answer: their presence is due to historical reasons, namely, the events of World War II and the treaties of the countries that won the war to divide Germany into zones of influence. The meaning of this division was to restore law and order, which had been abolished by the actors of the Nazi regime, who involved Germans and citizens of other European countries in criminal activities, the inevitable end of which was the defeat of the German army and the economic catastrophe in Europe. However, the allies in the anti-Hitler coalition differed in their ideas about what the new legal order should be: the politicians of Great Britain, America, and France wanted to establish a political order similar to the American one, while the representatives of the USSR insisted on the establishment of a socialist political order. As a result of these differences, Europe became an arena of confrontation of political ideas and outright hostility between their supporters, which was embodied in the military blocs of the Warsaw Pact and NATO.

This confrontation lasted until the early 1990s, and ended with the withdrawal of Soviet troops from the countries of Eastern Europe, which was a shameful capitulation of the former Soviet political leadership in the context of the economic and political crisis in the USSR. As a consequence, the former socialist countries, including the GDR, came under the control of NATO countries, which continues to this day.

While until the early 1990s West Germans still had reasons to justify the presence of American soldiers on their territory, after the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Eastern Europe, more and more citizens began to doubt the necessity of continuing the previous policy. The ambiguity of this condition is that on the one hand America remained the guarantor of law and order in Europe, and on the other hand European politicians began to abuse the American military presence to establish an openly fascist and Nazi political regime, covering its reality with demagogy about freedom, law, welfare, progress. The moment of insight came when Americans experienced the niceties of European fascist and Nazi methods on their own skin.

The Republican victory in America's last Democratic election is a symptom of this awakening. But the mere appearance of Donald Trump to the American people is not enough for the victory of sanity and law and order over their German and European perversions. Living in Germany since 1993, I have witnessed and chronicled the rampant Nazism and fascism in that country, abetted by the American army. Since Donald Trump is the Commander-in-Chief of the U.S. Army, it is his direct duty to mobilize American soldiers in Germany for its denazification. This duty stems from the role America played in the revival of Nazism and fascism in Germany, as well as in causing the current war in Europe. In addition to my letter of March 18 of this year, I am writing to Donald Trump to demand that he fulfill his official duties as Commander-in-Chief of the U.S. Army. The eradication of Nazism and fascism in Germany and in Europe is also his moral obligation: Only in this way he can atone for the guilt of the American people to the German people and earn their and my respect. Otherwise, I will revoke his presidency.

Dear President of the United States,

Since I have not received an affirmative answer from Pastor Paula White-Cain to my inquiry regarding the possibility to distribute in the USA the book published by me {1,2}, my wish to participate in the Academy of Public Health as its full member has not been satisfied so far {3}, and your representatives are negotiating with psychopaths (who are incapable to hold any public office due to mental illness) in the hope to stop the war on the territory which is under the jurisdiction of the Community Rus' since 2018, which concerns me to an even greater extent than the first two cases {4,5}, I address you with an offer to purchase from me 1 copy of the print edition of the New Testament, edited and published by me. This special price may seem too high to you, but I assure you that my offer is very beneficial to you, because in case you do not take advantage of it, I will end your presidency abruptly. {6}

All my other demands are set forth in my Letters to the American People, which I strongly advise you to reread so that you may realize the debts and sums involved. {7, 8}

Dear Dr. Bhattacharya,

I would like to draw your precious attention to a discussion initiated by me on the occasion of the 10th International Congress on Peer Review and Scientific Publication[1]. This discussion has a general importance for the following reasons:

The pathological system of peer review is an anachronism inherited from the past. Peer review is an opportunity to perform an unlawful censorship which ensures that no apostate notion ever get published in mainstream journals. Or such peer review censorship is an opportunity to steal any content and to claim afterward the priority of first publication. And last but not least, the peer review is an academic tool to promote the mainstream pseudoscience.[2]

Peer review is unsuitable for the purposes of its application, and therefore there is no reason to continue doing something that evidently has harmful consequences. The entire system of scientific evaluation, starting from the indexation of knowledge[3,4] and ending with scientific education and recruitment, must be renewed.

Academic freedom means not to suppress the freedom of thinking. But some or all organizers of the International Congress on Peer Review are evidently doing the very opposite. In order to prevent misconduct and to ensure freedom of expression at said congress, some or all its organizers, advisors, and reviewers must be exchanged and all abstracts must be resubmitted and reviewed by scholars respecting freedom of thinking.

Scientific journals have had enormous positive impact on the development of science, but in some ways, they are now hampering rather than enhancing open scientific discourse. After reviewing the history and current problems with journals, a new academic publishing model is proposed. It embraces open access and open rigorous peer review, it rewards reviewers for their important work with honoraria and public acknowledgement and it allows scientists to publish their research in a timely and efficient manner without wasting valuable scientist time and resources.

Dear Dr. Ioannidis,

I would like to express my wonder at today's letter from Annette Flanagin, the Executive Director of the Peer Review Congress (copy is included). I assume that it was written without your approval and therefore I am writing to you, as well as to other affiliate members of the Meta Research Innovation Center at Stanford University.

I would like to submit my abstract to the 10th International Congress on Peer Review and Scientific Publication. This abstract summarizes a 27 pages manuscript written in Russian and already published this year in the Journal Enzymes ISSN 1867-3317 {1}. But original manuscript can be translated into English language and subsequently published elsewhere. The importance and also the relevance of my publication for the International Congress on Peer Review is clearly apparent from both original text and also from English abstract. To further substantiate my submission I refer to my letters published last year {2-4}.

I hope that my publication will be appropriately considered and my abstract will be accepted for publication.

Continuing the famous discussion of free will, in which psychopaths propagated the lack of free will in all humans, not just in themselves, current psychopaths repeat the same idée fixe, this time formulated as a predictive pattern completion that is supposedly inherent in all humans and is the basis of their rational decision-making, the criterion for which should be a system developed by the authors for evaluating appropriate behavior within the framework of normative appropriateness, and compliance with appropriate behavior should be monitored by machines to which human qualities, including intelligence, are attributed.

I argue that such a theory of determining normality and appropriateness is not only unethical, but also scientifically wrong.

The cliché-ridden thinking does not require reflection, and is essentially the automatic thinking inherent in all animals. Most people think strictly in clichés, and this determines their behavior. Although such people are considered mentally normal, in reality they are handicapped. The basis of industrial production is the assembly-line reproduction of templates, whether of things or work operations. The efficiency of industrial production is explained by the ease with which templates can be reproduced, but the usefulness of this system is rarely questioned, because questioning presupposes the ability to think outside the box, and the people involved in the reproduction of templates do not have this ability. The consequence of mass intellectual disability is catastrophes like the one that occurred in Germany in the 1930s and 1940s.

Revocation of appointments.

All appointments made by Joe Biden must be revoked due to his legal incapacity[1]. This concerns not only so called political appointments but also appointments in the federal agencies. For example, Monica Bertagnolli was nominated by Joe Biden on May 15, 2023 to serve as the Director of the National Institutes of Health, confirmed by the U.S. Senate on November 7, 2023, and took office on November 9, 2023. The National Institutes of Health is the primary agency of the United States government responsible for biomedical and public health research and therefore he must be removed from her position together with many other officials at the National Institutes of Health, including but not limited to the Directors of all 27 Institutes and Centers, the Inspector General, and the Ombudsman[2,3,4]. The National Science Foundation is another federal agency, whose recent Director Sethuraman Panchanathan was nominated by President Barack Obama 10 years ago as a member of the National Science Board[5]. According to the Survey of Federal Funds for Research and Development[6], the federal outlays for the Department of Health and Human Services was $69,148 Millions in 2022, compared to federal outlays for the Department of Defense with $68,968 Millions in same year. These absurd outlays come from false and pseudoscientific notions and paradigms, resulting in overestimating fictitious dangers and ignoring real ones. There are numerous examples of such biases and spurious correlations, some of which I have explained earlier in my publications, which however were completely ignored both by the staff of above mentioned federal agencies and by the leaders of the National Academy of Sciences[7], in consequence of which they must be removed from their present positions due to incompetency and for failure to fulfill their professional and administrative duties.[8,9]

Dear Dr. Buckley!

Thank you for your praise of my publication in your letter and for the invitation to publish in the journal of which you are the editor. Taking advantage of your invitation and disposition, I would like to express some of my thoughts on the culture of publication in general. As you know, the seminal monograph on schizophrenia was translated into English almost 40 years after its original appearance, and 70 years later I have put the text of this translation on the Internet to make its contents available to English-speaking readers. Today, machine translation and publishing technology allows the rapid dissemination of scientific knowledge, but there are still significant barriers that exist in the path of knowledge to its potential recipients. What are the reasons for the mismatch between the technical possibilities of acquiring and disseminating knowledge and people's actual knowledge?

The New Testament, in addition to all its other excellent qualities, tells of the transition from the oral tradition of transmitting knowledge to its written form. Jesus Christ himself writes nothing, but is already a reader of the Old Testament, and his preaching of the Word of God is witnessed by his disciples. The impression of direct communication with the teacher is incomparable to reading, the effectiveness of the statement and action of a living person is incomparable to their description. Is this not the reason for the difficulty in perceiving the content of the New Testament? The process of reading is labor-intensive in itself; it presupposes the reader's ability to reproduce the multidimensional world from its alphabetic representation. Although this ability is innate, inherent in all members of the genus Homo, it requires appropriate development to realize its potential.

Before the meaning of the narrative can reach the reader's consciousness, the reader himself must go a long way: on this path he must learn to speak, read and write, i.e. to express his thoughts coherently, by learning the alphabet of conceptual thinking, and from the adding up of letters proceed to the adding up of words in speech and text in order to understand the meaning of what is spoken and read. All this he cannot learn by himself, he learns it from other people who have already mastered all these abilities. That is why there are teachers who have made the demonstration of these abilities their profession, and the aim of their work is to develop these abilities in every person.

What is happening in reality? In reality, school teachers do not develop the abilities of self-education and independent thinking, but rather train children, deforming their psyche with conditioned reflexes, and their school programs increasingly resemble machine learning programs aimed at turning people into servants in a political system devoid of any meaning. School textbooks, largely filled with pseudoscientific nonsense, wean children from the skills of perceptual reflection, and the very content of their perception is limited to school and urban space, supplemented by various simulations of reality. In contrast to what is done in schools, true education must begin beyond artificiality and must be turned to naturalness, to the reality in which man has emerged and in which all his faculties have developed. Attempts to substitute this natural space for its artificial semblance are detrimental both to nature and to the human race. Instead of increasingly separating man from his historical homeland, it is necessary to care for the harmonious combination of past and future, so that the trajectories of individual development correspond to the historical path previously traveled by the human race. The source of living water is inexhaustible, but only those who are on the right path can reach it and draw from it.

I chose my profession early on, realizing that life is the most precious element on this planet and perhaps in the entire universe. The path I have traveled in my almost 60 years of life has been through many obstacles, and since I began my public writing, it has not been an end in itself. My motives are different. Of course, it is nice to receive praise from you for the first time in many years of silencing my name and my publications, but I am not flattered, I am concerned. What are you asking me to do in your letter? To write something for the journal of which you are editor, although you must be aware of my rejection of the generally accepted system of reviewing scientific publications, which has become an obstacle between writer and readers, or, more generally, between teacher and disciples. However, per review is not the only obstacle of this kind. The parable of the sower says it well: grain that falls into thorns or roadside stones or is nibbled on by birds is sown in vain, only that which falls on fertile soil yields a harvest. Lord, how much has been said about this, but so far the meaning has not reached the people.

It would be useful for the journal of which you are the editor to publish my current letter, breaking all the established traditions of academicism, and calling readers to action, instead of many words said and spoken in vain. Circumstances demand action, not words, and that is what I urge you, as well as other authors and readers of the mentioned journal, to do.

Measures against pseudoscience.
(English translation from original German text)

Following the annulment and prohibition of the Federal Republic of Germany and further measures aimed to denazify Germany, any promotion of prohibited organizations and their activities as well as participation in such organizations and activities is unlawful and must be discontinued without further demand in order to avoid any consequences under criminal law. Because German pseudoscience itself has distorted the notion of what is permissible and impermissible, legal and illegal, right and wrong, German pseudoscience and the pseudoscientific propaganda practiced by German Nazi criminals must be effectively eliminated. To ensure this, I order the closure of all bodies and institutions that promote pseudoscience and falsify science, including Springer Nature, Holtzbrinck Publishing, BC Partners, International Mathematical Union, Leibniz Institute for Information Infrastructure, Leibniz Institute for Psychology, Leibniz Association, in addition to the German Research Foundation and the International Science Council. I transfer all the assets and property of these organizations to the Foundation for Constitutional Development.

„The ignoring of scientific psychology, which was eroded by various pseudoscientific concepts, led subsequently to a rampant democracy in which any distinction between mental health and disease was lost, and this in turn led to the overpowering of psychopaths that continues to this day. Psychopaths have turned schools, whether schools of general education, universities, or such of specialized higher education, into factories for the production of psychopaths, just as defective prion proteins cause a chain reaction of conformational transformation of normal proteins homologous to them into pathogenic ones. The unlearned lesson in the history of psychology is that there is still no scientifically sound certification system for psychologists, and the consequence is the inability to counter psychopaths and psychopathological tendencies in society. That is why the reestablishment of the International Psychoanalytical Association and the reexamination of psychologists based on criteria of scientificity and rightfulness is necessary to put an end to arbitrariness and irresponsibility.“ — A. Springer is a publisher of academic literature and, measured by the number of publications and citations as well as its commercial efficiency, is one of the leading and most successful companies in academic publishing. A closer look behind the facade of his seemingly success story, which began in Berlin in 1842, reveals a very different picture. After answering the questions: What Springer really is? and: Why has it so far escaped the sanctions imposed on other German corporations such as Volkswagen and Bayer?, the author explains why it is necessary to re-establish the International Psychoanalytical Association.

Scientific American is published by Springer Nature. The main shareholders of Springer Nature are Holtzbrinck Publishing Group and BC Partners.

„Errors are the greatest obstacles to the progress of science; to correct such errors is of more practical value than to achieve new knowledge," asserted Eugen Bleuler in his monograph on Schizophrenia. Basic error of several prevailing classification schemes of pathological conditions, as for example ICD-10, lies in confusing and mixing symptoms with diseases, what makes them unscientific. Considering the need to bring order into the chaos and light into terminological obscureness, I introduce the Causal classification of diseases originating from the notion of bodily wholeness and causality of its loss.
